

Community Policing Innovations Fund 2021 Request for Proposals

What is the Community Policing Innovations Fund?

The Community Policing Innovations Fund was established to identify and support pathways for investment, leadership, and impact on community projects that address systemic inequities in policing and public safety.

Looking at the seven-county region, we are interested in supporting a pilot group of cities who have a genuine commitment to innovating their local police departments by building change in their practices and/or redesigning their structure and services. We hope that these pilot communities can serve as examples to others in the region in the years to come.

Who are we?

To catalyze local investment and respond to local needs, the Hudson-Webber Foundation and the Community Foundation for Southeast Michigan provided seed funds to establish the Community Policing Innovations Fund. This funding is aimed at providing support in the community for pilot cities. Both of our foundations have a long history of building collaborations and deploying funds to benefit local communities. Based on the findings from this initial investment, we will work to include and invite other philanthropic partners to expand the effort. We are pleased that the Ballmer Group and Oakland County have also made contributions to the Fund to support this pilot period.

Our Priorities

The goal for the Fund is to provide the guidance and support necessary for local communities in partnership with local law enforcement, to develop community-driven, substantive, and pragmatic changes in the way that policing and public safety services are provided. Consistent with some of the priorities that many communities are voicing with respect to policing and public safety, the Foundations have established some general areas of focus for the Fund to guide the development of community-specific initiatives.

The programs that are supported through the fund will focus on one of five areas, numbered below, which encompass two broad categories, Transforming Police Practices and Forging New Paradigms:

Transforming Police Practices

1. Use of Force. In the wake of the horrific death of George Floyd, communities are wanting to ensure that the policies, procedures, and training of their police department with respect to use of force are consistent with best practices and with the values of the community. Particular focus should be paid to collaboration that would address current use of force policies and directly engage the community so that police policies and practices better represent the needs of the community by their agents of public safety.

2. Officer Accountability. Communities are trying to understand whether they have the necessary, overlapping series of checks and balances to be able to identify problematic performance and hold officers accountable for misconduct. Applicants could re-imagine a police officer contract, adopt new discipline process/matrices, provide training and/or retraining mechanisms that would allow for both accountability from the police after problematic performance and greater trust with the community.
3. Disparate Enforcement and Treatment. Some communities, especially smaller communities, are taking their first steps in understanding whether their police department's patterns of enforcement activity may be having disparate effects on communities of color – and exploring what alternative enforcement techniques might promote public safety while reducing identified disparities. Applicants might outline a program for collecting and analyzing data on police stops, search and/ or arrests to determine whether certain types of activities are having an unwanted disparate impact, and/or they may outline the development of policies and training geared toward raising awareness of subconscious or implicit biases. Applicant may also consider a review of calls for service and how 911 operators can be an agent for determining caller bias prior to sending a unit to respond.

Forging New Paradigms

4. Re-Imagining Public Safety. Across the country, some are arguing for “defunding” or “abolishing” the police. Others are speaking of transforming the model of local policing. Different people talk about these concepts in different ways. However, at the core of many of these conceptions is an interest in “reallocating or redirecting funding away from the police department to other agencies funded by the local municipality” with the intent to provide for public safety without relying on armed police to serve as the primary responders to various social and community problems that they may not be best situated to address.<sup>1</sup>

Applications that focus on a process for exploring differential response and re-imagining public safety could develop thoughtful collaboration between police and social service agencies to begin a conversation about how to re-align the response method for calls for service where mental health, trauma, or youth may be involved to include or collaborate with city/community public health or social service programs.

5. Truth & Reconciliation. Nationally, communities are thinking through whether there can a structured process in which the community may give voice to their history, pain, anger, and grief; the police acknowledge their historical and specific role in that history; and establishing a common, shared vision for how the public safety relationship can be different in the future. Applicants could consider police academy or departmental training that offers regional/ community history, implicit bias training, and real-world scenario-based de-escalation training all that include community participation as educators, scenario role-players and restorative justice circle participants.

For the areas (4) and (5), above, the Foundations recognize that a complete overhaul of one community's public safety system, or a comprehensive truth and reconciliation process, is not realistic through this RFP's funding. However, applicants in this space can seek support and assistance on establishing a framework for a collaborative process of understanding where police services could be re-aligned to best serve the community in crisis. This might, for instance, include the development of a multi-member/multi-stakeholder Task Force to evaluate address calls for service data to reflect the how a differential response approach might be implemented by a jurisdiction. Similarly, applicants might seek support on establishing a framework for a community-driven process of dialogue aimed at addressing local histories and experiences involving law enforcement and police interactions.

Specifics of What We Fund

Based on the priority areas listed above, the Community Policing Innovations Fund is seeking to partner with local jurisdictions in southeast Michigan to provide financial support for technical assistance and subject matter expertise in the re-imagining of policing services and public safety in their area. The seven-county region applicants would target the Fund's priority areas above to partner communities and police departments together, under the guidance training and technical service providers provided through the grant, in the design of specific public safety initiatives that are both innovative and collaborative across agencies, city-stakeholders, and community groups. It is anticipated that an average of $40,000 in assistance per community will be provided during this pilot round of investments.

The Foundations are looking for collaboration from either new or already-in-place partnerships/ coalitions between law enforcement agencies and community or city-stakeholder groups that want to advance their collaborative work through capacity-building and real-world interventions that will drive change. Applicants would have a clear definition of the terms of their partnership and be able to provide Memorandum of Understanding, Partnership Agreement, or City Ordinance or other municipal law or action that formalizes the partnership and shared understanding of its collaborative goals.

The Foundations will support local communities and community partnerships by matching technical advisors with selected communities and partnerships. Therefore, support will primarily flow to technical advisors selected by the Foundations or requested by the communities to support partners to accomplish the proposed program or initiative.

Throughout the engagement, with guidance and support from the Foundation, recipients will be provided with training and technical assistance as well as subject matter expertise to inform best practices in the space and focal areas of the initiative. The Fund will coordinate quarterly workshops for the recipients on priority areas and create a space for the recipients to collaborate among one another to build on ideas and innovations from their various jurisdictions. Training and Technical assistance may include key learnings on an area or idea based on other national or regional initiatives that have showed measured success in differential response, policy, community and/or law enforcement trainings or the like. Subject matter expertise will be provided to assist the recipients in targeting best practices across the field of law enforcement, community policing, community engagement, and differential response.

During the program's development and engagement recipients can expect to be responsible for partnering with TA providers to undertake the following:

Developing an Action Plan. Through initial meetings hosted by the Foundation, providers would work with the selected sites to develop individualized action plans for implementing the proposed approach including an assessment of their own training and technical assistance needs. This action plan should reflect the goals of the recipients' partnership efforts, necessary steps their proximal and distal goals, and how real-time evaluation can be incorporated to help improve the program. The subject matter experts will provide the necessary assistance and trainings to the site and maintain regular, ongoing contact to ensure that tangible progress is being made and that outstanding challenges are addressed.

Planning Trainings, Workshops, and Other Capacity-Building Events with Sites. Convening a series of workshops, trainings, or other capacity-building events around a specific topic like strategic -action planning, implementing organizational change, assessing progress will allow the various initiatives supported by the Fund to learn from experts as well as each other. These workshops can also help spread ideas and outcomes. These can be a combination of virtual and in-person workshops. These convenings can help to "cross-pollinate" insights and lessons learned across efforts – compounding and enhancing the real-time reach of the various, supported initiatives while organically building the capacity of non-governmental stakeholders to lead and technical assistance providers to provide guidance in the space.

Evaluating Success & Documenting Lessons Learned. Throughout the series of workshops, training and subject matter expert support, the recipients will be provided insight and methodologies to develop mechanisms for reporting on progress and success. Technical assistance providers and those conducting the various supported initiatives should identify and execute towards a formalized mechanism of evaluating the success of the reform program and documenting lessons learned. It is hoped that reporting back in this way can further build the knowledge and capacity of non-governmental stakeholders and technical assistance providers, as well as communities across the Southeast Michigan region on effective monitoring and evaluation in their area of focus.

Specifics of Support

This will be a competitive process. If selected, a community will receive an average of $40,000 in technical assistance support. Competitive applications will be those that demonstrate a strong level of the community's readiness and interest in one or more of the five priority areas. It is anticipated that up to 10 communities from across the region will be selected for the first cohort.

If selected, communities will then create an "action plan" with their technical assistance provider, and the Community Foundation will pay the contractor and/or set of contractors directly for providing those services. (eg. Trainings for police or communities, One-on-one coaching for city leadership, etc.)

The Community Foundation has identified high-quality national and local technical assistance providers to pair communities with. However, if a community already has a relationship in place with a technical assistance provider that they want to utilize, that provider will be considered as well. The review committee will want to assess whether the provider meets the values/focus of this effort.

Special Opportunity: Thanks to a contribution to the Fund from Oakland County, an additional cohort of up to 10 Oakland County communities will benefit from this effort. Any community in Oakland County selected will be eligible not only for $40,000 in technical assistance, but also up to $50,000 for support to implement strategies after the technical assistance phase has completed.
